Chapter 119: Ashborn’s Clones and Their Inner Worlds

Like the clones of Sung Jin-Woo and Sung Su-Ho, Ashborn’s three clones also developed powerful inner worlds within their bodies. These inner worlds allowed them to create emissaries, beings of extraordinary power and intellect who served as extensions of their will. Each emissary embodied the core aspects of their respective domains and played a crucial role in the execution of Ashborn’s divine purpose.

1. Ashborn’s First Clone Inner World and Its Emissary

The first clone of Ashborn, stationed in the domain of the Apostles of God, crafted an inner world that reflected the purity and order of the celestial realm. This inner world, known as the Sanctuary of Radiance, was a realm of eternal light, its skies bathed in gold and its landscapes gleaming with divine structures. Here, time flowed differently, allowing Ashborn’s first clone to refine its power and strengthen its connection with the Apostles.

The Emissary of the Sanctuary of Radiance
The emissary born from this inner world was known as Solarius, a being whose very presence radiated an aura of divine light. Solarius embodied the principles of discipline, justice, and guidance, reflecting the role of the Apostles of God. This emissary was tasked with leading the Apostles in their training and ensuring they adhered to the strict doctrines laid out by the Divine Triad. Solarius was also a master tactician, assisting in the formulation of strategies to protect the Absolute Realm Universe from external threats.

2. Ashborn’s Second Clone Inner World and Its Emissary

The second clone, assigned to oversee the domain of the Heavenly Soldiers, created an inner world known as the Realm of Celestial Glory. This vast domain was filled with monumental fortresses, towering citadels, and endless battlefields where the very ground shimmered with celestial energy. The terrain was ever-changing, constantly shifting to mirror the Heavenly Soldiers’ need for constant training and improvement.

The Emissary of the Realm of Celestial Glory
The emissary born from this inner world was Aetherion, a being of immense power and unshakable will. Aetherion embodied the spirit of the Heavenly Soldiers—strength, resilience, and loyalty. Tasked with maintaining order and ensuring the preparedness of the legions, Aetherion oversaw the training of the Heavenly Soldiers and coordinated their movements, making sure they were always prepared for the next battle. With a heart of unyielding devotion to the Divine Triad, Aetherion was instrumental in ensuring the soldiers remained united under Ashborn’s leadership.

3. Ashborn’s Third Clone Inner World and Its Emissary

The third clone, stationed in the domain of the Dark Apostles within Nocturne Abyss, created an inner world that reflected the essence of entropy and destruction. This realm, known as the Abyssal Void, was a place of shadows and swirling dark energies, where time was warped and the laws of reality often bent to the will of its inhabitants. The Abyssal Void was a mirror of Nocturne Abyss, reflecting its primal nature of decay and entropy, allowing Ashborn’s third clone to harness the dark powers within.

The Emissary of the Abyssal Void
From this inner world emerged Nyxaroth, an emissary who embodied the principles of entropy, decay, and the eternal cycle of destruction and rebirth. Nyxaroth was a being of shadows and darkness, capable of manipulating the very fabric of reality to consume and decay all that it touched. Tasked with overseeing the Dark Apostles and ensuring their continued role as guardians of the void, Nyxaroth guided them in their mission to maintain the balance between creation and destruction. The emissary also served as an executor of Ashborn's will, ensuring that the dark forces remained in check and that the inevitable decay of the universe was balanced with the creation of new forms of life and power.

Conclusion

Each of Ashborn’s three clones, with their distinct inner worlds and emissaries, played a critical role in upholding the will of the Divine Triad. These emissaries were not mere extensions of power but beings of deep wisdom and divine strength, capable of commanding vast forces and ensuring the realms they protected remained ever in balance. With the support of their emissaries, the three Ashborn clones carried out their divine tasks with unmatched precision, further solidifying Ashborn’s dominion over the multiverse and his role as the Celestial Being of Light and Darkness.

Summary of Chapter 119: Ashborn’s Clones and Their Inner Worlds

Ashborn’s three clones, like those of Sung Jin-Woo and Sung Su-Ho, developed unique inner worlds within their bodies, enabling them to create emissaries who embodied the essence of their respective domains. These emissaries served as powerful extensions of Ashborn’s will, aiding in the execution of his divine purpose across the multiverse.

1. First Clone – Sanctuary of Radiance and Solarius:
The first clone, stationed with the Apostles of God, created the Sanctuary of Radiance, a luminous realm of eternal light and order. Its emissary, Solarius, was a radiant being of justice and discipline, tasked with guiding the Apostles, ensuring their training, and protecting the Absolute Realm Universe.

2. Second Clone – Realm of Celestial Glory and Aetherion:
The second clone, overseeing the Heavenly Soldiers, created the Realm of Celestial Glory, a domain of fortresses and endless battlefields. Its emissary, Aetherion, embodied strength and resilience, overseeing the training of the soldiers and maintaining unity and readiness among their ranks.

3. Third Clone – Abyssal Void and Nyxaroth:
The third clone, stationed with the Dark Apostles in Nocturne Abyss, created the Abyssal Void, a realm of shadows and entropy. Its emissary, Nyxaroth, embodied decay and rebirth, guiding the Dark Apostles in their mission to balance destruction with creation and serving as an enforcer of Ashborn’s will.

Through their inner worlds and emissaries, Ashborn’s clones upheld the Divine Triad’s balance, ensuring order, strength, and entropy coexisted harmoniously, while further establishing Ashborn’s supremacy as the Celestial Being of Light and Darkness.
